The Blue Boar Inn

The Blue Boar Inn occupies the first floor of a Medieval structure which was built by William Ludlow in 1444 during the reign of Henry VI. It is believed to have originally served as an annexe to the Blue Boar Inn which stood on the site now occupied by Bradbeers.

Eleven years after it was built, the War of Roses broke out in 1483 Henry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, was brought to Salisbury in captivity and is reputed to have been beheaded in the Court Yard outside, for the part he played in these wars.

Beneath the cobblestones of the old inn kitchen was found an ancient skeleton which was minus its head and right arm.

In medieval times, it was common for the head and right arm of traitors to be sent to London to be affixed to Temple Bar or exposed on Tower Hill. It is possible therefore, that after the remains of the Duke were hidden close to the place of execution.

A copy of 'The Saturday Magazine' dated 6th April 1839, which elaborates on the discovery is exhibited adjacent to the restaurant entrance. 'The Duke' is said to haunt the building and several members of staff relate experiences which contribute to this legend.

The alternate red and white roses which embellish the frieze on the screen at the far end of the building are the badges of the rival Houses of Lancaster and York. The two great contending parties in the wars already referred to.

The massive oak hammer beam roof trusses are of particular interest and exhibit a typical form of roof construction for the period. It will be noted that the hammer beams are terminated by small shields; they have now been appropriately emblazoned with the armorial bearings of: The City of Salisbury, Henry Stafford - Duke of Buckingham, Bishop Beauchamp - a 15th Century Bishop of Salisbury whose name is mentioned in connection to the building and William Ludlow.

The original contract for this building is still in existence, and a copy may be seen in the restaurant.

Medieval oak hammer beams

This Bradbeers store stands on the original site of two historic inns. - the Blue Boar Inn and the Saracen's Head. In 1444, during the reign of Henry VI, a local man, called William Ludlow, built a timber-framed dwelling on the site, measuring 67ft by 20ft. The footprint of that building still exists today. Both inns were later incorporated into the larger building.

Our restaurant, is housed in part of this historic building and is believed to have originally served as an annexe to the Blue Boar Inn. The oak beams and fireplace you can see date back to this period.

The Duke

Henry Stafford, second Duke of Buckingham, was brought to Salisbury in captivity in 1483 and beheaded. The execution is believed to have taken place in Market Square, opposite what is now Bradbeers, on November 2 after being found guilty of treason by Richard III.

Many historians believe Buckingham may have been plotting to take the crown for himself when he switched sides during the War of Roses and backed Henry Tudor. He was also suspected of being involved in the infamous imprisonment and murder of the Princes in the Tower.

It is thought the Duke spent his last hours locked away in an attic room of the Blue Boar Inn, which is immediately above you.

Even today the store is said to be haunted and his ghost has been seen by several members of staff.

The Market Place

The Market Square remains the historic heart of the medieval City of Salisbury. It was first granted a Royal Charter by Henry III in 1227. The charter allowed the City to hold markets every Tuesday and Saturday. Unofficially, Salisbury had been holding regular Friday markets for some years prior to this.

The 13th century design of the market place has changed little over the centuries. It still occupies the same site today and has operated as a market and public space ever since. Most of the changes have been in the type of goods sold over the years. Surprisingly, though, sheep and cattle were still being sold here until as late as 1957.

The Structure

The 15th century oak hammer beam roof trusses are of particular historic interest and are a typical form of roof construction for the period.

The beams are terminated by small shields. These have now been appropriately emblazoned with the Arms of the City of Salisbury and those of both Henry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham and Bishop Beauchamp, who was Bishop of Salisbury at the time.

This is why this part of the Bradbeers store is a Grade II listed building.
